

"Ka-Pow"

I only married him so Wonder Woman couldn't. No one in Metropolis liked Wonder Woman. Especially not me. Gordy liked her though. But he liked me better. That's why he asked me to marry him instead of her. You'd think after fifteen years, she'd get over it. But she never did. She was the jealous kind.

"He's sick, you know," Wonder Woman said. "He's been hiding his disease from you ever since the two of you met. If you don't stop sleeping with him soon, you'll get it too."

I ignored Wonder Woman and kept on walking.

"It's true. I'll even put my magic lasso around myself and say it again. That way you'll have to believe me."

I thought that if I just ignored Wonder Woman, she'd eventually get tired and go away. She didn't. After a few hours of following me through town, she jumped in her invisible jet and harassed me from up above. Wonder Woman had a bullhorn with her and used it generously. I think she thought only I could hear her, boy was Wonder Woman wrong. She had the whole town begging her to turn the darn thing off. When I finally said I believed her that Gordy was sick, she landed her jet and got out.

That's when I hit her. Right between the eyes. She didn't even see it coming. Which is a good thing, because everyone knows Wonder Woman can kick some serious butt.